1. The public is souring on Elon Musk's role in the Trump administration.

How we know: A poll, out today, shows 57% of Americans disapprove of the billionaire's role. Disapproval is up among almost all demographics.

Zooming out: Musk remains less popular than President Donald Trump. But Trump's approval rating is sinking as he pursues controversial changes that will be hard to reverse.

One more thing: A Democratic governor is generating presidential campaign buzz.

2. Trump officials denied U.S. citizen children were "deported" to Honduras.

What's happening? On Friday, authorities flew three U.S. citizen children from two families to Honduras. One child is a 4-year-old with Stage 4 cancer.

The latest: One official argued yesterday that the children were taken to Honduras because their mothers, who were being deported, wanted to bring them.

In other news: A judge's arrest is the latest front in Trump's battle with the courts.

3. At least 11 people were killed when an SUV rammed into a Vancouver festival crowd.

What we know: Dozens were injured in the attack Saturday night at a festival celebrating the Filipino community. A 30-year-old man was charged with murder.

Today in Canada: People will vote in a federal election. It had long been assumed that time was up for the ruling Liberal Party — but then came Trump.

4. North Korea confirmed it sent soldiers to fight in Russia's war against Ukraine.

The details: U.S. officials have said for months that North Koreans were in Ukraine, even leaving behind clues on the battlefield. Today, North Korea acknowledged its presence.

What else to know: A CIA official's son was killed fighting with the Russian army. And Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-South Carolina) has had a remarkable tone shift on Ukraine.

5. A "60 Minutes" correspondent criticized CBS's parent company on air.

Last night: Scott Pelley informed viewers that Bill Owens, the show's executive producer, resigned last week over alleged interference by parent company Paramount.

A rare rebuke: Pelley said Paramount "began to supervise our content in new ways". The company has been trying to gain government approval for a merger.

6. Six hours of sedentary behavior a day was linked to neck pain in a recent study.

The findings: Low-energy activities greatly increase the risk of neck pain. Using cellphones is the riskiest screen-based activity, increasing the likelihood of neck pain by 82%.

What else to know: We spoke with more than a dozen experts (now seniors themselves) about how to age well, and what they would tell their younger selves.

7. The Rock & Roll Hall of Fame announced its 13 latest inductees.

Who's in? The White Stripes, OutKast, Cyndi Lauper, Joe Cocker and Chubby Checker are some of the biggest names in the class of 2025.

Some notable absences: Mariah Carey and Oasis were among the nominees but missed out this time around. The induction ceremony will take place Nov. 8 in Los Angeles.
